Hints to Remember

Who: India

What: destroys its own satellite with a test missile, still says space is for peace

When: published on 27th March 2019

On March 27, India announced it had successfully conducted an anti-satellite (ASAT) missile test, called "Mission Shakti". After the United States, Russia and China, India is now the fourth country in the world to have demonstrated this capability.

The destroyed satellite was one of India's own. But the test has caused concerns about the space debris generated, which potentially threatens the operation of functional satellites.

There are also political and legal implications. The test's success may be a plus for Prime Minister Narendra Modi, who is now trying to win his second term in the upcoming election.
